The lamp explosion caused the fire. The vessel was run ashore and sixty passengers were landed. A strong wind aided the flames and in ten minutes the entire upper works were turned. There was a great excitement among the passengers; but owing to the splendid descepline of the crew, and the cool and steady conduct of Captain Asbury and officers most all were safely landed. The books and papers of the boat were destroyed and a list of the passengers cannot be given; but it is thought none were lost other than those named. The passengers lost all their effects, and many of them, when they arrived here on the steamer Josie this morning, especially the ladles, were still in their night clothes.
